Ten years after the end of the war, Whitman observed that the real war would never get into the books. Believing that the real war consisted of the personal stories of individuals, the unnamed participants and witnesses, Whitman doubted that conventional historical accounts would tell a true story. For Whitman, the heart of the war

Quotes from The Real War "The defining characteristic of today's intellectual and media elite is that it swims merrily in a sea of fantasy. The world of television is essentially a fantasy world, and television is today's [1980's] common denominator of communication, today's unifying American experience.
