24 OAH Magazine of History â€¢ July 2007 the home could be brought into the public arena to implement social reforms, especially those concerning poor women and children. In the 1920s, white women continued what had begun in the Progressive era:

The New Woman and the Politics of the 1920s

womanâ€™ could affect oneâ€™s citizenship status. If an American woman . married a foreigner before 1907 and the married couple continued to . reside in the United States, she did not, because of her marriage, cease to . be an American citizen. The American woman remained a U.S. citizen . even after her marriage to a non-U.S. citizen.

When Saying â€œI Doâ€• Meant Giving Up Your U.S. Citizenship

women were childlike and incapable of independent thought. They believed that women could not be counted on to vote responsibly, so they left women out of statesâ€™ voting laws and the Constitutional amendments that granted voting rights to African American men.
