"Navigating Irish Ecocriticism: Eamonn Wall's Writing the ... "Writing the Irish West: Ecologies and Traditions, Wall has distilled the earlier experience of geographical binarism into an illuminating critical approach. His new book examines contemporary Irish writing on the West of Ireland through the wide-angle lens of cultural, critical, and literary writing on the American West. About | Eamonn Wall The main chapter in local Irish history began in the 1830s with the arrival of the first wave of Irish to build the Central of Georgia Railway. The story goes that Irish were employed on the railroad because, unlike slaves, their bodies had no commercial value and could be worked to exhaustion with impunity. Irish History in Savannah, Georgia - Moon Travel Guides He has also published a scholarly monograph, Writing the Irish West: Ecologies and Traditions (2011), and an essay collection, From the Sin-e Café to the Black Hills (2000). Ireland: Memory and Monument - WordPress.com The poem is among the most striking reminders that Wall is intent on chronicling not only human displacement, but also the environmental devastation that all too often triggers that displacement—a concern that he developed in his groundbreaking critical study, Writing the Irish West: Ecologies and Traditions, which would provide the impetus ...
